

Did you know

the Dispute Resolution Center offers Fair Housing support to landlords and nonprofit service providers?

What is the Dispute Resolution Center?

We have offered mediation and conflict resolution services in Snohomish County for nearly 35 years. We are committed to helping Puget Sound residents resolve conflicts. As a part of Volunteers of America, we are backed by an agency with over 100 years of dedication to the communities we serve.

Whose side are we on?

Our service model is based on neutrality, not advocacy. We are not an enforcement agency. We're here to assist all residents of Snohomish County, landlords and tenants alike.

How do we provide that assistance?

- Conciliation services: a facilitated conversation, usually done by calling each party in turn, to help landlords and tenants better understand one another's needs.
- Mediation services: a facilitated meeting, usually done in person, to help landlords and tenants better understand one another's needs (a nominal fee may apply).
- Education services: we are partnering with the Fair Housing Center of Washington to bring formal Fair Housing trainings to Snohomish County in the Spring of 2024. One training will focus on the needs of landlords and one will focus on the needs of nonprofit service providers.
- Counseling services: you can call us with your questions regarding Fair Housing.

What do our services cost?

We do not charge landlords or tenants for Fair Housing training, conciliation or counseling. Those Fair Housing services are paid for with funds made available through the Snohomish County Community Development Block Grant Program and Snohomish County Ending Homelessness Program.
